New Zealand Books

Review Journal Celebrates Its First 20 Years!

New Zealand Books is marking its 20th year of publication with a celebratory summer issue (publication date 2 December 2011).

The quarterly is the only periodical dedicated to reviewing this country's books. It focuses almost entirely on New Zealand publications, and also carries opinion on any and all book-related topics, new poetry and occasional works in progress.

Its audience is the general reader, rather than the specialist. It treats books in depth at a time when many regular publications are either doing away with their books pages or cutting back their coverage of books.

Published by Peppercorn Press Charitable Trust, NZB began life as a conversation between poet Lauris Edmond and editor and music specialist John Mansfield Thomson. They brought together a group of friends willing to sink $500 each into the new venture, which was modelled on The London Review of Books.

Other founding members of Peppercorn Press were Vincent O'Sullivan, Shelagh Duckham Cox, Martin Bond and Pat Hawthorne.

The first issue came out in April 1991, edited by J M Thomson. Later editors included political commentator Colin James and poet Bill Sewell. Harry Ricketts has been co-editor since 1998, Jane Westaway since 2003.

The journal is published with the support of Creative New Zealand, as well as that of its readers, reviewers and advertisers.

I'm Reading

Rowena's Review - Lurzers International Archive

Rowena Bahl
Marketing & Web

I absolutely love Lurzers Archive. It requires no reading whatsoever (well in terms of words that is!) and is filled with the visual genius of masterful creatives from all over the globe. The stimulating visuals in every issue are definitely my cup of extremely good tea.

It showcases the best in advertising and really emphasizes the portrayal of advertising as an art and the fact that human imagination has no boundaries.

The amazing work bounded within its glorious pages inspires one to think out of the the box and reminds us that a simple idea can be just as effective as a complex one. So if you are in the creative industry then consider this your creative bible.
